Choosing Your Trustee

When establishing a trust, you are making a legal arrangement that gives your trustee power to manage your assets on behalf of one or more beneficiaries. One of the most important choices when creating a trust is deciding who you will name as trustee. The trustee you name will be responsible for managing trust assets and making distributions on behalf of your beneficiaries according to the instructions in your trust document.

What are the Trustee’s Responsibilities?
Before naming someone as trustee, you should give serious consideration regarding whether he or she can handle the responsibilities and duties required. Responsibilities of a trustee include the following:

- Managing and investing the trust assets
- Filing accountings, maintaining records and paying bills
- Managing the needs and expenses of the beneficiaries
- Maintaining real estate owned by the trust

What Should You Look For in Identifying a Trustee?
Your intentions will be carried out effectively only if the trustee you choose has the competence, time, and decision-making ability to fulfill the terms of the trust. Your trustee should have a sufficient level of investment knowledge, must be objective in making decisions, and should be available to handle the time commitment needed to administer the trust. Several questions to consider when selecting a trustee include the following:

- Will the trustee be able to make the objective decisions necessary to manage the distributions for the beneficiaries?
- Are there any potential family dynamic issues between the trustee and a beneficiary that should be avoided?
- Will the trustee be able to make prudent investment decisions in managing the trust portfolio?
- Is there a possibility that you could outlive the individual you name as trustee?

Who Can Serve as Trustee?
Any competent person over the age of majority can serve as trustee (in NC, the age of majority is 18). A financial institution or trust company can also serve as trustee.
